An instrument which can hardly be looked upon with a kindly eye by unpunc-tual watchmen and other employees, a part of whose duty it is to place themselves on record at stated times, is the insummph. This device, by the aid of electric urrents, presents at a predetermined time a clear space of signatures at an opening in a suitable desk, and at the end of the time of grace allowed moves it past the opening. The tell tale and time checking systems itherto used, owing to the fact that the necessary signals are made by electric curents set in motion by discs, or plugs, or ncess buttons, are to a certain extent ineffalse register being made while the employee is absent. For the steps I hold so dear;

To fancy they've come
To their own loved home,

Yet never a sound to hear,

Save the ceaseless heat of my anxious heart, That throbs like a "muffled bell;"

To recken the time By its dreary chime Is sadder than words can tell. Yet greater far the anguish Had hope of their coming fied! Were the daring one,

That in storm and sun Has been my world since we were wed, Were he lying asleep among the dead, Then life would be a shoreless son, And my shattered bark Would drift but he dark

And soon be wrecked in misery! But who can paint my rapture When his steps are at the door? And his kindly eyes Light the midnight skies With a glory the sun never wore. Then joy awakes said sings in my heart, While earth seems "a heaven below,"

As I find in his kiss

DIAMOND DRUMMERS. Every Precaution Taken To Prevent Thieves Stealing Valuable Gems. "Do I carry any great sum of money in diamonds with me on my trips through the country? Do you call a hundred thou-sand dollars any great sum? Well, I have frequently carried that amount inside my vest in loose diamonds," said a salesman of one of the largest wholesale diamond houses in the country. "Tell you how I carry such valuable stones? Well, I don't know as it makes any particular difference, although it is a subject about which few diamond men like to talk. "I have been in the business now over fifteen years," continued the salesman, settling himself comfortably in a big arm chair, lighting a cigar and sending grace-ful clouds of smoke curling toward the celling. "I don't think it's a very hard life, as living goes, though somewhat of a dangerous one, as you are known to many crooks' and frequently run the risk of a desperate attack through the mistaken notion that you go about the city at night with diamonds on your person. I have had several little scrimmages, but have always managed to save my diamonds.

"Now, in telling you how I carry loose diamonds I am speaking only of unset stones. Men who have set stones have trunks and boxes made especially for that purpose and are tolerably safe, except in hotels where sneak thieves can get in or crooks follow you, taking the adjoining room and coming into your bedroom while you are asleep. You wake to find a revolver against your head and a gloved hand over your mouth. A confederate goes through the trunks, as such theves nearly always work in pairs, and before you can extricate yourself from the well tied cords and gag after the thieves have gone they have too much the start of you to be ever caught.
"When I first began on the road I used to carry the stones in a chamois belt lined with silk around my waist next to the skin. This was not only uncomfortable but troublesome to get at when I arrived at a hotel and wished to deposit the stones in a safe. Now my tailor always lines my vest after a peculiar fashion of my own," continued he, opening his vest and showing four large pockets attached to the lining of the front of the vest. "You see the lining is of very strong material, and sewed to the first lining of the vest with the best of thread. The four pockets are simply the two usual pockets with a double seam in the middle dividing them. Of course they are made somewhat larger, so that the pocketbooks holding the diamonds will exactly fit them. The pocketbooks are hooked with a spring to a closely woveu, finely tempered steel chain that is attached to a light but strong belt around the waist. Even if a pickpocket succeeded in getting hold of one of the books he could not go off with it on account of the chain. Some men have pockets put on the inside of the front waistband of their trousers, but I pre-fer these in my vest. The whole secret of the thing is to get the books as near the person as possible, so you can feel them all

22,0000 "Now for the pocketbooks that hold the see it is two pieces of close grained, rather stiff leather, joined by a more pliable piece of leather, so as to selmit of doubling one over the other. These two thin strips of steel across the two backs, as we will call them, are finished in the front of the book with two holes to admit of the book on the steel chain extching through them and so holding them strong and safe. The inside is of Russian leather, twice as long as the back of the book, so as to double over the papers of dismonds. Each side of the pocketbook will usually hold four papers, but I have mine made so that they will hold six, as I frequently have extra large "Now, last but not least," said the salesman, opening one of the papers of diamonds by unfolding it twice, opening the ends and then lifting the last fold off of the third fold, on which rested the diamonds, in much the same way as a druggist folds papers for prescription powders, with the exception of turning the ends in before taking the second fold, "this out wide paper is, as you see, of the very best quality lines paper, but not too stiff, and an eighth of an inch larger than the inside sheet of tissue paper that holds the dia-

"The regulation size for the outside sheet is eight by ten inches, which when folded up makes a package two and a half inches ong and an inch and a half wide. As I place the papers in the box a rubber band holds such individual paper in its place, and a second and stronger rubber band holds the two flap ends of the inner book over the papers.

Excessive Perspiration. Many persons are troubled with excessive perspiration about the face and arms. A remedy for this is almostd meal, or pistachio meal. This may be applied to the face dry or in the bath. It gives a peculiar velvety softness to the skin, and is exceedingly agreeable.
